And Tulks Confidentially to Mr. Thurber. Letter From a Sixteen-year-old Who Requests na Antograph .- Conjugation of the Verb "Done."

[Conyright, 1903, by Edgar W. Nye.] Iluck Shoals, N. C., Arden Postoffice, July. It is now that everything is in full lear in this country. A young woman a trifle over 7 feet high comes to my slosh on the French Broad and sells me berries. Once my wife was away, and I did not know how we were fixed for berries. Herries, both black and straw and rasp, are sold here at 5 cents per big quirt and hulled ready for the table at that. They are good all summer.

"Sit down on the porch, Birdie," I said.

and converse." She sat down, but still remained taller than I was. I never saw a longer waisted person or one who was so uniformly of one size all the way down, us my friend Comstock says-not Anthony, but another man ultogether. She had a chest like a grasshopper, and us she sat there with her long, sad face, reminding me of a horse with a sunbonnet on, I said to myself: "Shall I buy these berries and let her go home or wait till my wife comes and discovers as conversing and then remains forever unhappy? Shall I break up our happy home or not?"

She looked hungry too. She was. 1 would say that, regarding her from a Scriptural stundpoint, she was without form and void.

The red bugs seemed to unnoy her u good deal on the ankles. That is how I camo to learn that her enlyes were on the front side. She reminded no of a Staten Island ferrylaat-you couldn't nlwnys tell whether it was going over to She was a merry little mountain mald.

I think they call her about here Splayfoot Sal, but it may be another girl who guthers berries and fas that name. I nu not sure. She is the Turbeel Sequein of Ticktown. It would do you good to see her guileless ways. Some day she will marry a low set man with 11 dogs, and they will live on wild eucnmbers and blackberries and rear their young, and they will never laugh, and he will never get asphyxiated inless some neighbor in the fend business usphyxiates him with a double barrel shotguu, and their lives will be as even and as devoid of incident as they would be in the penitentiary.

Yet they will be content. Never having seen Trifany's store, they will not yearn for any of his goods. Never hav-ing boarded at Delmonico's, they will actually prefer bacon and corn bread or hominy. Two friends of Splayfoot Sal went into Asheville to work at Oakhand heights. They did well for a month, Then they came to Miss Vanghan and said they guessed they'd have to quit. "What's the matter?" asked Miss V. "Well, we can't live on this here truck you give us to cat."

"Why, don't you get the same that we What do you have to eat?" "Why, we get beefsteak and white llour bread and yeal and lamb meat and knickknacks. Them donit sustain folks. They just tantalize 'em." "What do you want?"

"Why, bacon and corn bread. There's somethin to hit, but we can't work here week after week on goodies. We want somethin that won't 'vanish itself away' in a hour or two."

One old lady took a bito at the same place one day, heing a sort of pensioner on the bounty of the proprietress. Miss V. gave her some vanilla lee cream. The old lady kept talking and running on about times and how hard they seemed. Then after swinging her knife nimlessly around and standing it up on the table awhile she swooped down on the vaulth lco cream and spread some of it on her bread, talked some more, ate some more and then burst out with:

"Gosh, Emilie, how cold yer butter tented as Thurber of Washington, who is private secretary for President Cleveland. Timrher does not greet the ghel morn more blithely that do these simple children of the vales of Pisgah and the covey clearings and settlements of Roan mountain. Of course I do not know Mr. Thurber, but Mr. Cleveland has promised mo a letter to him, and I shall hope to call his attention to the paire joy that comes not of annimited powers alone. To him it is pleasant, of course, to mold an administration or make up an itiner ary for the president. But let us pause, Thurber, pause to consider that, stirred up and voxed and worried over holding np one side of the great national fabric as you are, especially when the president Is out of town, wo are 92,500,000 miles from the sun, and we only get one twobilliouth of his solar heat. Other worlds get the balance.

Think of that, Thurber, when you put on your black cambric sleeves and reign. I could Imagine Robert Browning calling for you if he were aere and waiting out in the front entry quite a long time while you quarreled with the cublact or told one of them who was a little unruly to remain with you after the others had goue home. I say I could imagine Robert cooling his heels and shaking the water out of his numbrella in the front entry of the White House wnitlug to get in, but, falling even to do that, then going sadly away, while in the distunce he could hear you pouring out a volley of oaths on Mr. Cleveland. Then I hear the gentle, quiet voice of the poet as he quotes from himself:

And yet I deem that God is not disquieted. Do you realize, Thurber, that you and I and the German emperor are only worins in the vast economy of nature?

Do you understand that men struggle to the close of a long lifetime and are never heard of? That they study and work to get even an opportunity to appear on the stage, think a thought and retire? Do you consider the fact timt they fall even in thut?

Why should you and 1 try, Thurber, try to be great stars and be well fixed. when the nearest fixed star issefar away that it takes three years for its light to reach us, and ho is not so very well fixed

We should not overestimate ourselves, Thurber. We should be modest. Look at the pictures made to represent me. Would you stand that, Thurber? No, Indeedyl

Here is a boy who writes me on a postal card, notwithstanding the ruling In the Thirty-tifth Massachusetts Reports In Bingham versus Hingham, page 205 -viz, that correspondence purported to matter written on a postal card.

Women Gamblers,

[ENCHANGE.] In the summer season the woman

gambler comes prominently to the fore though she is almost as great an element in society during the winter, but the world at large does not have a plaint made with reference to the chance to regard her until she appears at the race track in the lull glory of smart summer finery and eagerly feverish to back her favorite horse or jockey, as the case may be.

The experienced race-goer is more calm, but even she is not as stoical as the masculine better. Women selleast pretentions to cleanliness and dom, if ever, enter the betting ring, decency. is generally not averse to taking a hand in a game of poker, or, if her means will permit, dabbling a bit in stocks. The element of chance has a strong fascination for the feminine mind and in a milder form the gambling fever shows itself in the eager quest for bargains that all women so revel in. To see the woman gambler at her best or worst, if that word is more appropriate, you should behold her at Monte Carlo, where she makes no pretense of saying that she plays for amusement. It is downright sober earnest, and many there are around those tables gray-haired and wrinkled who began when they were young and by means of some system of playing have managed to eke out cemeteries. Base Bull.

A syndicate composed of thirteen of Hartford's base ball enthusiasts was organized and the expenses of the Elizabethtown-Hartford game was assumed. On Tuesday at 1 p. m. the Elizabethtown's arrived and at 4 o'clock the game was called. The Hartford's took the field and the fun began. It was a lively game trom start to finish, but an inning was not played before it was apparent that the Elizabethtown's would win for they were playing ten men and the tenth man was the umpire, Weller, whom the Elizabethtown's had brought PREPARED for the occasion. With a fair umpire Hartford would have won with ease.

The score was 18 to 8 in favor of the visitors. No more unsatisfactory work was everdone on our grounds by any umpire.

Hartford? TOWN TATTLER.

Little by little, inch by inch and the zenith of her glory. Nearer and nearer she comes to complete success in aping the airs of her more fortunate contemporaries. Nobody, who for once has looked upon the current of River Rough, has for a moment doubted that it affords the most exquaite opportunities for bathing purposes. And from time immememorial the youngsters and the oldsters of the male persuasion, from springs gentle zephyrs to autumn's icy winds, have stirred its mud begirt bottom with their unclean feet. But Hartford is not satisfied to follow in the old paths. She must and she will strike out into things new and enticing. Her latest departure is a stunner. Some of the enterprising young misses, who have not more than reached their teens conceived the idea that it would be just the thing to follow the example of their brothers and sweethearts and go bathing in the river. They donned their motherhubbards and wended their joyous way to the rippling waves.

The boys were somewhat abashed at first to see the fair invaders but they only moved up to the bridge and kept on their pants. And it is thus we move and breathe and have our being. The older sisters of these sweet things, who have started the ball, are studying the question seriously and it may not be long ere we see them all-the younger and the older, the lithe and the plump. the augular and the rounded-in their brightest and neatest bathing suits, wending their innocent way to the river. And then the young men will fall into line and then everybody else and his wite and then, oh, then, we'll enjoy all the delicious delights of the

A slip of a girl with slim, young shoulders, childish form and shy, rosy face half avolding, half inviting theguze -this was Fauchette.

Fauchette Hagot they called her in the village, where old Mother Hugot was well known. But Fanchette shook her head. She was no kith and kin of Mure. Hingot, that she knew, and Jacques knew it also-Jacques, with his banny brown head and bright, bold face and gruy attire, which marked him of the better class; Jucques, who loved her better than she loved the turkeys which she tended, and swore that every dark hair of her head under the red turban was precious to him.

Jacques' father called her the little turkey tender and threw her a coin from his carriage as he passol. But Fanchette treasured the coins and made herself more beautiful in her lover's eyes with her finery-ribbons that matched the blue of her eyes and roses that rivuled the carmine of her dewy lips.

When Jacques took her in his urms and told her that he loved her and let the light of his beautiful eyes shine in hers, she forgot the whole world just for that one moment. She forgot to wonder that God should let his creatures suffer so; that he should distribute blessings so nnequally. She forgot that old Mother Hugot was a hard mistress and forgave her the bruises on her poor body and the unkind words she used toward her. She mounted into heaven when Jacques put his arms about her and she could lean her head for a moment on his broad shoulder.

But these opportunities were seldom granded her for sinking her scotlin Lethe. There were cows to milk, and the pigs to feed, and the turkeys to tend, and when she could finally slip away to her lover whistling impatiently round the corner of the lane she had but a few moments to spare from her mistress, who was impatient the instant the girl was out of her sight.

They used to watch the moon come up semetimes, round and fiery and glowing in the soft warm sky, and Jacques would claim a kiss for every star that appeared in the heavens us they watched. Ah, Fanchette loved the stars! One shone into her little ensement at night, and she it, and his kisses seemed to her again laid on her lips as she fell asleep with her eyes fixed on the distant light.

Funchette was very faithful to Mother Hugot, who grumbled at having to keer her and called her shiftless and a goodfor-nothing. But Fauchette knew from the tiny gold locket around her neck and from the embroidery on a bit of a gown Mother Hugot had shown her that she was Jacques' equal at least, and she al-ways looked for a delivery to come to her in some guise or other. Every morning when she arose she would say, "Perhaps today my deliverer will come," and every night when she went to bed she prayed, "God, I thank thee that I am yet nlive, for I know thon wilt send me great blessing tomorrow."

So when the fairy godinother finally did arrivo Fanchette was the least surprised of any of the village. When Jucques unct her that evening in the lane, he laid his head down against her to hide his face, out of which the gay light had faded. 'You are going away," he cried, "to be a great lady. You have a title; you will live in a palace. 1, poor Jacques, what shall I do? I think death would not be difficult." "I shall come back, Jacques, in a year -they have promised me that-and then we can be married if you are waiting for me still. Parting is lut a test of true love. Dou't give your kisses or your love words to other girls to umke the time speed faster, my own Jacques. If I feel that you are all my own in deed and in thought, there will be no sting in the sadness of our parting." Jacques lifted up his head. The moon came up lightly over the late lime trees and shoue upon his boyish face."

"I promise," he said, solemnly lifting his hand on high, and theu he drew her dark head against his shoulder and pressed her lips with his own. "In a year from tonight I will meet you here. Oh, Fanchette, my love, my own, you will not fail me?" "Never, Jacques, if I come to rags. 1 will keep my word. If I come to a beggar, still I will meet you here." "Remember our star, Finishette. Ev ery night I will look for it, and when you see its rays you will know your Jacques is dreaming of you and praying for your return."

When the sun chased the shadows from the earth next morning, Fanchette was many miles uwny.

She went to a palafial home. She gowned herself in satins and saw herself hedecked with jewels. She grew more fair than a poet's dream, and she planced with nobles and was uttended by aristocratic dames.

She was still Fauchette, and ut night

she looked at the star she loved and nurmured the prayer of her childhood's days. Every heartbeat was for Jacques. every tear for Jacques, every smile for Jacques. Sho knew not if he were dead or living. When she was of age, at the end of the year, then sho would know. Her beauty expanded. Her eyes were deeper, her form rounder, her skin firmer, with a glow like polished marble. She carried her head with a sancy tilt, her lips melted into smiles, her cheeks dimpled. They called her Funchette the lovable. When II months had passed, she put her arms about her newly found father. She murmured Jacques' name with an intonation like a ringdove in her volce, and a frown corrugated the old man's handsome brow. He flung her aside. "lugrate!" he cried stormlly. Fanchette kissed him sadly and crept away. Just at that moment she longed for the starlighted land, the coins that Father Badeau threw to the poor turkey driver and the curses of Mother Hugot with a heartslokuess that terrified her. She never mentioned Jacques' man again. She stolo from her home one uight at the hour of 12. She jaused beyoud in the corrblor and gave one glance behind at the luxury wrapped nest she shitting mirrors reflecting painted cellhigs hung in roses with a frieze of enpids, soft, rich carpets and lace hung bed where dreams of Jucques had circled round her drawsy head. She saw her finy satin shoes, subtly suggestive of indolence and with a touch of personality seeming to cling about them still as they lay disearded on the white for rug before the scented fire. Her clance wamlered to an open chest of untique wood hard by, heaped up with the choicest treasures of the milliner's art. Here a fan coquetted with an opera cloak, there a dainty ball gown spread its flimsy flonuces over a Parisian bonnet laden with purple violets.

She dropped a tear, she burst into a Her woman's heart cried out after all this luxury. Her better nature whispered Jacques' name into her ear. The tear became as a rainbow touched by her smile. She turned and fled, crying. The world is well lost for love, my Jacques! 1 come! 1 come!"

In the old familiar trysting spot at last, waiting for her lover, she echoed those words. She erenched down and kissed the turf and the star eyed marguerites and laughed to herself softly and gleefully.

She heard his step at last. She arose with a new shyness born of her fresh beauty and her soleum joy. "Jacques!"

"What, Fanchertel You! What! Fanchette in the rags of the turkey girl?" he stammered. "Oh, yes, Jacques, yes! The turkey girl, Fanchette, whom you love. Not the lady Fanchette ever again! I am yours, Jacques, yours!"

He dropped his last from his hand. His rugged face paled and his lips quivered. She thought his joy unmanned him. He put both hands over his face and stood sic abashed before her dewy eyes. She brushed his hands with her red lips und whispered to him: "Look up, my Jacques! Surely you will speak to your own Fanchette? Oh, lie, friend Jacques, tears for joy, for-sooth! Methinks that is worthy of a woman. What! Will you not look at me? They say that I am greatly changed -a beauty, Jacques, your little Fan-chette! Are you not glad?" She was sobbing and langhing and elinging to him, the moon showing her dimples, and her soft, quivering lips, and her new great beauty to him in a maddening way. Her hair fell around him, her warm arms were laid upon his shoulders, she was leaning against him. delicious in her womanly gladuess. But he did not touch her after the first involuntary caress. He dropped upon one knee at her feet and haid his face against her hand.

Their star on high looked down upon them benignly. "Look, Jacques, look-our star! Do not kneel to me, my own Jacques, do not, I prayl See, it is smiling at ns-it is happy, too. The year is past, is past, Jacques, let us thank the good God together. But first will you not kiss me? Am I to sue for it, then? Dear friend, do not give way thus. I am here, close beside you, Jacques. I will never, never leave you now, love, unless you bid me

"I bid you go." The voice was hoarse, agonized with deathly auguish in its modulations.

"I am married!" He caught her, hell her to him as her eyes closed and cursed himself. "Fauchette, Fanchette, look up and listen! My God, I hate myself! I married Rosamond Cartier six months ago. -thought you would not come back.

"Don't?" Fanchette said, She seemed more beautiful than ever when she stood up again. But Jaques could not bear to look at her. She slipped away from him over the grass toward Mother Hugot's house. "Come to our house, Fanchette," he dended.

But she shook her head, lifted the latch and went in. She is the tarkey tender once again. She sees Jacques' wife roll by in her carriage. She is humble and patient, but she prays the old prayer no more.

All that remains of the past are the stars, and on calm nights who sho looks out of her window she still fancies as she weeps herself into troubled dreamhand that Jacques is once again claiming a kiss for every star in the crowded heavens. - Exchange.

TWO NEGRO STORIES.

They Are Told by Congressman Alich and Congressman John Allen, the bubbling humorist from Missi, sippi; is in great favor in Washington circles, for he generally has a bright story at his tongue's end. He was regaling a crowd of friends with some southern stories, and among them was the one which follows, one of the few stories of Allen's that has not gotten luto print: .

Allen had employed on his place an ohl negro servant who in times before the war was the property of the congressman's father. Old Uncle Rufus suffered frequent and ungovernable attacks of kleptommia-ettacks that seemed to be beyond all remedy. He was arrested time and time again for stealing articles from the place of his employer. Mr. Allen finally grew tired of attempting to reform his old servant, and he had him arrested for stealing a blg idece of side meat from the idantation storehouse. It was the intention to have the servant servo out a brief time in the county jail for the offense, with the hope that the imprisonment would check him in his habit of stealing. The old man plended hard with the "young malistah" to be released and recalled all the favors and kindnesses he had shown Mr. Allen when that dignitary was still a boy. Allen began to weaken on the line of this argument und was about to release the servant on the strength of Rufus with: "Now, Uncle Ruf, if you will bring back that side meat and promise me on the Bible that you will never steal unyon go. Furthermore, you will have to sign a paper promising on your solemn honor never to steal again."

Uncle Rufus hesitated for a moment. 'Mahs John," said he, "I'ze willin to I'll do dat. I'll do dat; but, now, look heah, Mahs John, you can't speet me to sign away my rights."

Allen's generous ways made him very popular with the old time negroes, and frequently he was called upon, without expectation of compensation, to defend them in suits for pilfering. On one occasion a colored preacher of the neigh-borhood was on trial for stealing some poultry from a neighbor. The preacher protested his innocence, and Allen made n very able defense for him.

The evidence, however, was strong against the parson, and Mr. Allen saw that his client would probably be convicted. He whispered to him after the case had gone to the jury und told him to prepare to meet the worst. The he could not just see how he was going to get out of the scrape. The jury was out only a few minutes, and the preacher lost all hope. After the jury had taken their seats and the foreman was beginning to read the verdict the old preacher jamped up from the seat and bawled out:

"Yo' hongh, Pgo"-"Sit down!" said the court, and turning to the attorney, "What dees the Rully to the G A. R. Fifty veterans will see the World's Fair as the guests of the New York Press. There will be special l'ullman Palace Cars full of them enroute to Chicago early in October. The New York Press proposes to send to the World's Fair as its guests fifts Union Veterans, members of the Grand Army l'osts, who are to be selected by the Sunday Press. This proposition is made as an evidence of the esteem and gratitude in which the Press holds the men who imperiled thier lives to save the nation. Each of the chosen veterans will be the guest of the Press from the moment the train leaves New York until its return, and the journey will be timed to include a full week's sojourn in Chicago, with all expenses paid, indeluding the daily entrance to the grounds of the exposition.

All ti. A R. veterans in good standing are elligible. They may come from any town, city, State or Territory over which the Stars and Stripes proclaims its government.

The seclection of the favorites will be made on the ground of popularity, their popularity to be voted by ballots printed in every issue of the Sunday It_Tastes

One reason why Scott's Emulsion of Pure No wegian Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Limand Soda has had such a large sale is because it is "Almost as palatable as milk;" but the best reason is that its curative properties are unequalled. It cures the cough, supplies the waste of tissues, produces flesh and builds up the entire system.

Scott's Emulston oures Coughs, Coldo, Consumption, Scrofula, and all Anaemic and Wasting Diseases. Provents wasting in children. Atmost as minuse as milk. Get only the genuine. I're-Lared by Scott & Howne, Chemists, New York. Sold by all Druggists.
